SUPERVISING PARAPROFESSIONALS IN MIDDLE SCHOOL CLASSROOMS: A

DESCRIPTIVE CASE STUDY

by

Jessica E. Chisom

Dissertation submitted to the Faculty of the Virginia Polytechnic Institute and State University in partial fulfillment of the requirements for the degree of

Doctor of Education

in

Educational Leadership and Policy Studies

APPROVED:

Jean B. Crockett, Chair

Susan G. Magliaro

Penny L. Burge

Travis W. Twiford

Carol E. Whitaker

November 12, 2002

Blacksburg, Virginia

Key Words: Paraprofessional, middle school, paraeducator, supervision

Copyright 2002. Jessica E. Chisom
Supervising Paraprofessionals in Middle School Classrooms: A Descriptive Case Study

Jessica E. Chisom

Abstract

The purpose of this qualitative study is to examine how teachers provide supervision to paraprofessionals in middle school classrooms. The numbers of paraprofessionals in school settings have continued to increase thus causing roles for both teachers and paraprofessionals to evolve. Teachers and paraprofessionals perceive the teacher’s supervisory role differently (D’Aquanni, 1997; Milner, 1998; Mueller, 1997). Consequently, this descriptive case study examines how teachers provide supervision to paraprofessionals in middle school classrooms. Questions regarding the teacher’s role as a supervisor are derived from Pickett’s (1999) supervisory framework, which addresses five areas: planning, task delegating, role clarifying, performance monitoring, and on-the-job training and mentoring. The results of this study both supported Pickett’s (1999) framework and added additional information that can enhance effective paraprofessional supervision in middle school classrooms. Results indicated that planning, formal or informal, does not exist, as it should, between teacher and paraprofessional teams in middle school classrooms. In addition, this study supported the notion that teachers are often uncomfortable delegating tasks to paraprofessionals. It also determined that roles remain unclear for both teachers and paraprofessionals. Many paraprofessionals feel they are not monitored at all by teachers, possibly due to the lack of role clarification. Finally, this study found that training for both paraprofessionals and their supervising teachers is minimal.
DEDICATION

I dedicate this dissertation to my husband, Brian, who is the reason I began this program in the first place. He has continued to encourage and support me throughout my time at Virginia Tech and in all other aspects of my life. I cannot thank him enough for the numerous backpacking trips he has taken that have enabled me to have uninterrupted writing time!

I also want to extend a special thanks to my family, for whom I am so grateful. My parents, David and Sharon Moran, have been my biggest cheerleaders through this process. My brother, Pete, has also provided me with continuous, enthusiastic encouragement. He has played a huge role in planning my graduation celebration, which I am sure will be unforgettable. And I can’t forget my grandmother, Edith Mann, who has supplied me with numerous study breaks at various restaurants around the Roanoke Valley. I am truly blessed to be part of such a super family.

Finally, I want to thank my friends (you know who you are) for your various ways of helping me to get through this program while maintaining my sanity. Read my lips, “NO MORE CLASSES!”
ACKNOWLEDGEMENTS

I would like to extend my sincere appreciation to several people who have helped me throughout the dissertation process.

I sincerely thank the members of my committee for their questions, collaboration, and unwavering support as I experienced this process: Drs. Jean Crockett, Penny Burge, Sue Magiliaro, and Travis Twiford of Virginia Tech; and Dr. Carol Whitaker of Roanoke County Public Schools, who is also a personal mentor and friend.

I thank Dr. Jean Crockett, my committee chair and advisor, for her extensive time, caring attitude, blackboard drawings that helped me to visualize this process, and faith in me to be able to complete this journey.

I also extend much gratitude to Kathy Tickle of Virginia Tech for her assistance and support throughout my entire time at Virginia Tech. She is a true lifesaver. Also, thanks to Sara Thorne-Thomasen, whose editing and suggestions have been invaluable to me.

A special thanks is also extended to the paraprofessionals, teachers, and administrators who participated in this study. Without their willingness to allow me to interview and observe them, this study could not have happened. You are all truly remarkable.
Table of Contents

Abstract ........................................................................................................................................... ii

Dedication ......................................................................................................................................... iii

Acknowledgements ......................................................................................................................... iv

Chapter One ....................................................................................................................................... 1

Introduction to the Study .................................................................................................................. 1

Context for the Study ....................................................................................................................... 1

Background of the Problem .............................................................................................................. 2

The Need to Study Paraprofessional Supervision .......................................................................... 4

Purpose and Methodology of the Study ............................................................................................ 4

Research Questions .......................................................................................................................... 5

Case Study Methods ........................................................................................................................ 5

Limitations of the Study .................................................................................................................... 6

Definitions .......................................................................................................................................... 6

Significance of the Study .................................................................................................................. 8

Overview of the Study ...................................................................................................................... 9

Chapter Two ...................................................................................................................................... 9

Review of the Literature ................................................................................................................... 9

Problems in Supervising Educational Paraprofessionals ............................................................... 9

Reviewing the Literature .................................................................................................................. 11

Examining the Conceptual Framework .......................................................................................... 12

Planning Work Assignments .......................................................................................................... 12

Task Delegation ................................................................................................................................ 12
School B ........................................................................................................56
Participant Selection ..................................................................................57
Table 3- Interview Participants ................................................................58
Assurance of Confidentiality ......................................................................59
Data Collection Procedures ......................................................................59
Interview Procedures and Protocols ..........................................................59
Observation Procedures: Assessing the Cultural Context ......................60
Document Data Collection or Recording .....................................................61
Reflecting on the “Process” .........................................................................61
Pilot Study ..................................................................................................61
Data Analysis Procedures ..........................................................................62
Addressing Quality ......................................................................................63
Data Management .......................................................................................65
Presenting the Results ................................................................................65
Chapter Four ...............................................................................................67
Findings .......................................................................................................67
Introduction ................................................................................................67
The Conceptual Framework .......................................................................67
Descriptions of the Schools in the Case Study .......................................68
School A ....................................................................................................68
School B ....................................................................................................70
Participant Characteristics .......................................................................71
Overview of the Findings

Planning Work Assignments

Task Delegating

Role Clarifying

Daily Performance Monitoring

Systematic On-The-Job Training and Mentoring

Reporting the Findings

Planning Work Assignments

General lack of planning

Time constraints often prohibit effective planning

Giving up control

Assumptions made about planning

Formal and informal planning opportunities exist in schools

Sharing information disguised as planning

Confusion between planning and delegation

Task Delegating

Tasks are not delegated

Tasks are delegated through written methods

Tasks are delegated verbally to the paraprofessional

Role Clarifying

Teachers and paraprofessionals lack a clear understanding of their roles
Written clarification of roles.................................................................98
Roles are clarified through training opportunities...............................99
Roles are clarified through open discussions.................................100

Daily Performance Monitoring..........................................................103

Table 5- Participant responses regarding the supervision and evaluation of paraprofessionals.................................................................104

Courtesies can be mistaken for monitoring........................................106
Monitoring takes the form of informal discussions..........................106
Paraprofessionals are not monitored....................................................107
Paraprofessionals solicit feedback from teachers...............................108
Monitoring occurs through informal observation.............................109

Paraprofessional Supervision and Evaluation........................................110

On-The-Job Training and Mentoring ....................................................112

No training is provided........................................................................113
Training takes place through inservice opportunities.......................114
Training is informal............................................................................115
Training consists of hands-on activities..........................................116
Training consists of written information...........................................117
Previous experience constitutes training.........................................117

Teachers need training regarding paraprofessionals............................117

Discussion of the Findings.................................................................119

Describing the Supervision of Paraprofessionals in Middle School Classrooms........120
Appendix G2, Themes Surrounding Task Delegating…………………………………159
Appendix G3, Themes Surrounding Role Clarifying……………………………………160
Appendix G4, Themes Surrounding Daily Performance Monitoring………………….161
Appendix G5, Themes Surrounding Systematic On-The-Job Training and Mentoring..162
Appendix H, Vita…………………………………………………………………………….163