Belief

As I traveled through life it became apparent to me that decisions, discussions, events and occurrences were simply convergences of forces and through these convergences experiences and memories were generated. During my undergraduate thesis year I realized the presence and proof of this belief and how it pertained not only to architecture, but to everything about me, around me and within me: the total environment.

Life became a series of convergences; multiple and simultaneous. Disjointed thoughts came together to form my belief. A means of sight. A methodology of thinking. A solution of resolution. This theory I have come to believe so strongly is the formulation of 1+1=3.
